Uncle Stan was a gentle man, and a gentleman. I always hoped that he would be handing out the hymnals at the back of the Presbyterian Church when I visited, so I could have a word with him. I wanted to share a memory about Uncle Stan that has always stuck with me. When I played in bantam or midget hockey, we travelled to play a game in Collingwood. I was cut on my face towards the end of the second period, and had to leave the game to head to the hospital for stitches. On my way through the lobby of the arena from the ice towards the change room, I was stopped by an older lady. She must have seen my jersey with Ritchie on the back, and asked me with excitement "are you Stan's boy?" I informed her no I wasn't. I saw the disappointment wash across her face. From what I now know, Stan had quite the reputation in that town for being a popular and skilled player. I went on to tell her my dad was Russ, which turned her disappointed face into more annoyed than anything, and she walked away with nothing else said. The bloody face and jersey, and me leaving the game early was more fitting of my dad's style of play anyway. I'll miss you Uncle Stan.

My husband (Doug Smith) played old timers hockey with Stan and when we went to tournaments, my middle daughter would always ask if Stanley was going to be there. As a child she loved being around 'Stanley', as she called him. He always had time for her or any child that wanted to spend time with him.
