I ran into Jeff just before Christmas and told him to take some much deserved time off. He responded that he “doesn’t feel right” unless he’s at work. And that’s just how he rolled. Worked hard and played hard. I’ll always remember him as the quiet observer, but make no mistake, he was introspective. When he spoke he made it count and would interject with a funny joke or a wise opinion. He would assess the audience and always reply with impeccable timing. Jeff would exercise critical thinking and deductive reasoning. He didn’t follow the pack or small town sub cultured thinking.. His opinions and opinions of others were made on his own which is an admirable trait known to few. I used to get in trouble for calling his bike purple, apparently calling it purple made it feminine. According to him, it was plum ! I saw it the other way around. His vehement correction made me laugh every time. My memories with Jeff are always with friends, laughs and fun. I’d say that’s a life well lived to be always remembered with a smile. My sincere condolences to Kelly and family.
