Sharon's illness and subsequent death has had such a profound effect on me as did my brother Bills. Both 64 years young, like me. Along with the sadness of not having Sharon with us for the remainder of this journey, I also have this sense of clarity in regards to how relatively short this time here is. I hope to be as strong, industrious and brave as Sharon. And yet I realize our richest rewards lie not in becoming great, but in returning at last, to who we truly are. Simpler, quieter, wiser versions of us, who are finally at peace with ourselves and the world. We all set out to make our mark on this world and maybe sometimes we may feel we have something to prove, even if just to ourselves. Yet, as our lives begin to fade into the shadows, it's clear life's greatest memories do not result from the adulation of others nor in charm or beauty destined to fade, but rather in the quiet wonder of all Gods creations. I force myself to remain present on this beautiful day, with clear blue skies. I hear a lawnmower off in the distance. A bumble bee busily hovers among the flowers (which will henceforth remind me of Sharon), the fragrance gently lingers in the air, the warmth of sunlight on my aging skin, fully embracing the sweetness of such an ordinary moment. We dream, we gain, we lose ...yet in the end, what matters most is not what we've conquered but what we've left behind, what touched us, and the hearts of others ...the echoes of laughter shared with the souls we hold near, quiet gestures of grace, the whispers of kindness which ripple outward beyond where we can see. Though Sharon's time ended here, according to Gods promise she has inherited a place in the new world of everlasting peace and joy where we all inevitably will join her one day. Praise God. May we always remember and be grateful for that promise and for the opportunity we've had to know this gracious soul. In the meantime we will feel her presence in many different ways as we recall her voice, and all the special moments spent together. ☐'-

Shalaigh and Matt and family Leanna and Ryan and family: We are broken-hearted by the tragic loss of a beautiful soul, my Sister and friend. How very blessed we have been to be chosen by your Mom and Grandma as family. We will miss her and the warmth, kindness and joy she gave to everyone she knew. She was unfailingly generous to us through all the terrible pain she was suffering til the very end of her life. Her courage and grace was a very humbling experience for me and I will carry her precious memory with me always. We think of you now, her family who she loved above all else, and hope you can find comfort in the love of family and friends surrounding you and the knowledge that your Mom is no longer suffering but is at peace. Our thoughts and prayers will be with you. We love you all very much.
